Fanciers of Canada

Well this year's U.S. National was a history making one for sure. As some of you already know the judge, William Bergum suffered a heart attack just as he had called in his Specials for a final cut. The ring steward, Joyce Standish, caught Mr. Bergum and eased him to the floor, preventing him from injuring himself any further. He really owes his life to all who helped him, including a Emergency Room Trauma Doctor that was watching the show. People reacted very quickly to save his life, we can be very proud of our Chow people at this show.

Kim La Cocca, also had some health problems and with the quick aid of an oxygen tank that Clif Shyrock had with him she recovered. She was taken to the hospital to get checked out then came back to rest at the hotel.

After Mr. Bergum was taken to the hospital and the ring was put back together, 4 judge's names were placed in a hat, Susan Peterson stepped in to finish the judging.

As Susan was calling out her winners Eileen Baldi collapsed in the ring. She passed out and was taken to the hospital via ambulance, where after treatment returned to the hotel to rest.

It was very hot in the building and that was one of the causes I'm sure for some of the problems these people had.

There was a very pretty Veterans bitch, Ch. Chowlamar's U Can't Touch This, who showed like a puppy throughout the whole show even in the heat. She certainly loved the applause from the crowd.

There were quite a few Canadians there watching and showing this year besides Harry and myself. Judy & Aaron Erickson, Pat & Russ Robb, Joan & Sol Falchuk, Joanna Parker, Christine Farnell, Paul & Minnie Odenkirchen.

It was a long drive for us, 1500 miles from here to Denver, but well worth the trip, next year's US National will be held in St Louie.

A Big Congratulations to two of our CCFC members, Sherrie Harper and Kathy Johnson. Cherie's Titanium O'Bravehart was a big winner, Winners Dog at the National and Best of Winners under Joel Marston at the All Breed show following RMCCC show.

Sherrie is Ty's breeder and she also handled this blue boy wonderfully to both of his wins with Kathy standing ring side holding her breath. He now has his American Championship, we hope to see him here in Canada finishing his Canadian championship too.

I'm sorry this issue is coming to you late, but with the trip to Denver it is taking me awhile to get back in the swing of things.

This tip is by Dr. Al Grossman, a psychologist, dog show judge, and handler of several champion dogs, including the former number one dog in the U.S. He has been involved with dogs for more than thirty years.

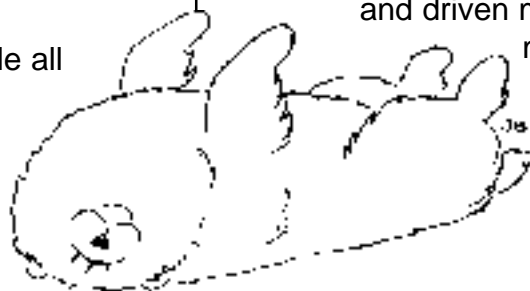

Dog's Eye View of Dog Shows

How Do Dogs React to the Rigors of the Dog Show Game?

If you're new to the dog show game, you need to appreciate that dogs are under a great deal of stress. It's an intense experience for them and they burn a lot of calories during a show. Being confined to a crate most of the day, riding from one strange place to another, and being separated from their owners is all very hard on dogs.

Because they can't speak and tell you their problems, you need to observe their behavior and performance. An article in The Oregonian on pet stress points out that "recent technical advances reveal that pets can face the same health risks as people, such as hypertension." You and your dog share the same risks that stress presents.

Some dogs handle all this with aplomb. Others react with varying symptoms, often failing to respond handler's wishes. Many a handler has come out of the ring cursing the handful they had to contend with that go-around.

Most animals are happiest when they have a set routine. They get let out of their runs at certain time, they get fed at a set time, and in the same place. Kennel or home surroundings are constant. They gain confidence by this routine. They know what and when to expect things to happen. In effect, they are in control. Now, you take that same well-adjusted dog to a handler for his show career. First off, the handle is a stranger in a strange environment. The dog is suddenly unsure where he is supposed to go or what he is supposed to do. The handler's feeding schedule--and often his food--are different from what your dog had been used to. Next, your dog enters into a training program that is foreign to him. Hopefully, he eventually gains confidence in his handler, but he is definitely not in Kansas anymore.

Just as your dog is getting used to this new routine, he is tucked into a crate, put in some strange kind of vehicle, and driven many miles away. He gets hauled out into unfamiliar surroundings yet again and has to perform in a strange setting. (Happily, most of the time he can do it.) Then, once again, he is tucked into his crate and it is off to another show on the circuit. During all this, the handler, can't pay much attention to your dog because he has a full slate of dogs entered. So, the dog gets a quick brush out, a cluck under the chin and he is expected to do his thing to perfection.

Is it any wonder that sometimes these great dogs "go off their feed?" They can handle only so much stress and then there is a breaking point.

Symptoms can include a dull coat, pulling back on the lead, whimpering when touched in certain places, and acting as if the lead hurts and they have tonsillitis, even though the Vet says they have no sign of it. These symptoms are reactions to a situation the dog can't handle. They want to withdraw and unconsciously chose the route that works best for them.

To the stress the dog is experiencing, add the handler's disposition and mental and physical health, and you can begin to understand why odd things can happen on any given day.

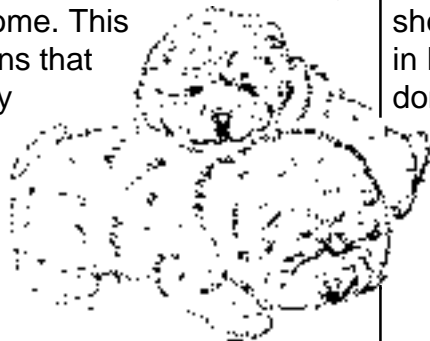

How can I insure that my dogs will win more regularly and be able to handle stress?

Let's start by acknowledging that good tem-perament is essential in any breed. This means the dog has to come from parents and grand-parents who exhibited these qualities. Today, a big thing is made of behavioral testing to see which puppies in a litter can react to strange and challenging situations and not panic or attack.

Dr. Ian Dunbar writing in the AKC Gazette in 1990 stated,

The quality of a dog's behavior, temperament and training varies inversely with the number of dogs in the household. Most dog fanciers start with a single dog which is both pet and show dog. Additional dogs are acquired along the way and at some point, many breeders opt for outdoor kennels to accommodate the growing dog population.

Kennel dogs receive less human attention and affection than household pets. Most breeders are women, and less than 40 percent of breeders have children living at home. This means that many puppies and adult dogs sold as pets have seldom met children or men (the two most common stimuli for fearfulness and aggression), are seldom exposed to the confusing commotion and cacophony of an ever changing domestic environment and are less likely to be walked regularly where they would meet a wide variety of human strangers as well as other dogs and animals in different urban and rural settings.

It's easy to see that the dog you purchased as your show dog may have come from just such an environment. Not that he hasn't been raised well and show some equilibrium, but he may not be ready or able to handle the new world you have thrust him into.

While a dog's basic personality is set at an early age, you can still help your dog and yourself by building on the foundation you have. Take your dog with you on walks. Take him to the mall (if he is allowed there), take him to outdoor shopping centers, and take him on short rides while in his crate that don't end up at the Vet's or the boarding kennel.

Reassure him at all times when he comes across a strange situation and is not sure how to react. Be positive and don't drag him into frightening situations telling him he is a crybaby and should be bold and aggressive. Buddy, if you do that I can guarantee a problem dog.

Go with your handler to the dog's first shows, let him know you are there and pet him a lot. Slowly, he will make the transfer to his handler and you will probably become jealous because the dog seems to prefer this other person to you.

Keep your expectations reasonable. If this is your first dog, the breeder probably didn't sell you a Best-In-Show specimen. You may more likely have a finishable dog. Having him finish his championship is surely better than a sharp stick in the eye, so show him, enjoy him, and most of all, love him.

A Canine Law Enforcement Officer for the Chattanooga Police Dept.'s Narcotics Squad has been suspended without pay, pending an investigation to have him dismissed.

According to a Federal Express employee that arrived at my door early this morning, it is standard procedure for Narcotics to visit Fed Ex on a regular basis, as dope dealers have been known to ship drugs via Fed Ex. They bring in a "trained professional, dope-sniffing dog" to seek out these illegal shipments.

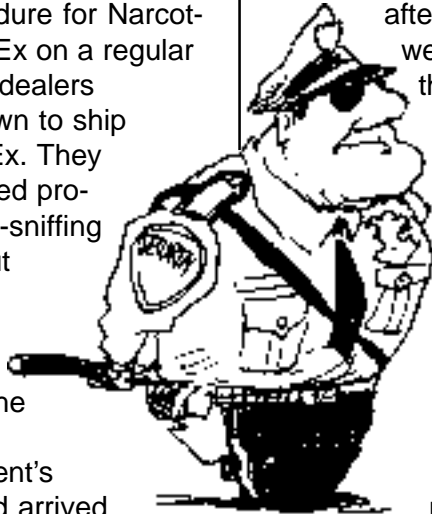

This morning, the Chattanooga police department's Narcotics squad arrived at their local Fed Ex office for an unannounced raid. The dope-sniffing dog was turned loose and instantly found a box that made him go ballistic, a box from Christine Cameron, and addressed to ME!

They just KNEW that they had found something, and proceeded to rip my package to pieces, only to find a present from Wrinkles' dad, Magic, that had been send overnight to Wrinkles' mom, Charli a vial of his precious semen, so we can repeat the breeding!

The policeman became the laughing stock of the Fed Ex office, much to their embarrassment, and numerous off-color jokes began to circulate like wildfire: last word has it, the dope dog is not a true professional, he was only supposed to react to certain smells, scents he was trained to sort out and respond to, as well as being trained NOT to react to dog, cat, or other animal scents. The officer in charge stated that the dog would most likely be fired.

The shipment left California late yesterday afternoon, and was supposedly only eligible for afternoon delivery. We were not amused that our carefully chilled shipment had been rifled through & exposed to temperatures other than the cooler it came packed in, however, we needed to receive our specimens as early as possible, according to Charli's last smear, so, what a surprise to discover Fed Ex at our door early this morning! Once they realized the fragile nature of the shipment they had so rudely disturbed, they decided it was a good idea to deliver it as soon as possible.

The semen was still very cool, the breeding went well, it was the 2nd and last now we wait 30 days on an ultrasound and keep our fingers crossed!

On another happy note, Ms Ch Bunni had her ultrasound yesterday, and she is expecting! Ch Rey Rey, who will be 6 this June, is the expectant father! The ultrasound revealed 3 - 5 puppies!

Some Days You Should Just Sleep Through

by Pauline Lock

Show days can be very fraught at times, the following account is of one such day.

Events usually come in three's, sometimes I wonder if it is worth overcoming all the odds to get to a show.

One weekend I planned a 9.30 a.m. start, it was a local show and I wanted to arrive for 10.15 we were to be second in the ring so no need to get there too early.

However: - first the kennel maid arrived late, on foot, had her car break down in the lane. This was neck and neck with the discovery that the dog who had just had a surgical removal of a lump had neatly removed all the stitches - So a flying visit to the vet took priority over everything else.

We flew home only to find that we now had a broken down oil tanker in the single track lane to add to the collection of vehicles blocking the lane - no chance of pushing that one out of the way! So hot foot down the lane I go with my suitably superglued dog under my arm, I collected the dogs booked for the show and the cage and the bag and took off again up the lane on foot - up the water-filled pot holed lane to the car.

- Luckily stranded on the other side of the broken down lorry, stuck in the lane. Its now 10.30 and the show is 40 minutes away, off we set past people working furiously trying to fix aforementioned vehicles.

Now why is it that when in a hurry ALL the slowest, biggest lorries seem to be in front of ME so we finally arrive at the venue along with coach loads of football supporters, Yes there is a major football match on next door and try to squeeze into a minute space. The only one I could see. Struggle to the hall door only to find that I had MISSED MY CLASSES. The Judge had judged all the terriers and most of the Utility Group and its only 11.15. Judging didn't start till 10.30.....

At least the ride home was uneventful and tomorrow was another day. Sunday - as I walked past the car on my way down to the kennels I noticed that I had a flat tyre.

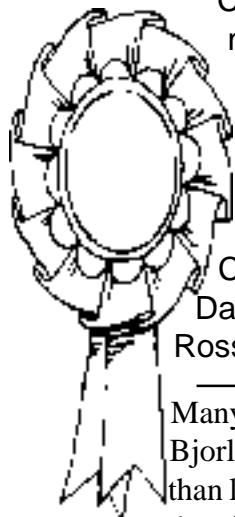

In the February - April issue I missed our latest Scottish

Champion to be made up, it is Scot.Ch

News from Solvenia

Vienna van Mansjoerije, is now SLO Jr.Champion, we finished it last month. I just returned from International Dog Show in Split (Croatia). I went with my friends and we have very long trip by car (320 miles). We drove nine hours, from 8 P.M. to 5 A. M.. Most of the way down was by the Adriatic Sea. Split is only 25 miles from Bosnia and about 250 miles from Monte Negro (Serbia). I entered Vienna in open class she is now 16 months old and she got CAC,CACIB and BOB. In the Best in Show she won again she got the first prize in five group.

We were almost to late to enter on the ferry. BIS finished at 6:30 P.M., departure of the ferry was at 7.00 P.M.. We drove like a Formula 1 and we didn't miss it! We rest there and arrived at 7 A.M. in Croatian north port (Rijeka). We had only one hour drive to Ljubljana then. We are tired but very happy!!

...Gordana

Also Congratulations to Vienna for winning JUNIOR EUROPEAN CHAMPION at EURO DOG this year!! She was judged by two different judges, one from Sweden and one from Russia ! Vienna won over 45 other junior Chows. Ages from 9 months - 15/18 months
